

Welcome to a Modern Day Twilight Zone

Thomas Handler (thandler@utk.edu)

Knoxville Philatelic Society

Both my wife, the rider in the family, and I have an interest in horses, though only I have an interest in the Sherlock Holmes stories and movies. I was in the Chicago area on business one weekend and after all was done as far as meetings go, a colleague and I went out to the local stores. As I was looking for Sherlock Holmes movies, especially those involving Basil Rathbone as Sherlock Holmes, we went to a used CD/DVD store to see if there were any DVDs of interest to me.

I came across one that I was missing from my video collection

Sherlock Holmes and the Secret Weapon.

I purchased the DVD and thought nothing more of it.

While still in the store I received a call from my wife who had gone to the Saddlebred Horse auctions in Lexington Kentucky to see about obtaining a horse for her to ride. The Saddlebred Horse is featured on Scott 2157. All she was able to say was that she had won, at auction, a young Saddlebred mare which had excellent lineage.

Her nervousness with having just purchased the horse she could not recall the horse's name. It was only after we both were home in Knoxville, did I find out that the horse's name was

The Secret Weapon

So, probably within a hour, my wife and I had purchased two different items with the same name though we were several hundred miles apart.

